'On-Site Training was Extremely Beneficial to our Successful Implementation'

Andy's Seasoning, a family-owned and operated dry blend seasoning manufacturer located in St. Louis, MO, has implemented BatchMaster Manufacturing for Dynamics GP to run its manufacturing operation. This regionally historic company, which began operations in 1983 had humble beginnings, starting with one simple, but incredibly tasty product, its barbecue sauce blended in owners basement. Over the next several decades, Andy's Seasoning had transitioned to become a nationally known firm and its decision to invest in BatchMaster represents a long overdue missing component supporting its continued growth.

The success of an ERP implementation can be due to several variables and Leigh Cannon of Andy's Seasoning states that the main reason for the success of the BatchMaster Manufacturing implementation was due to the outstanding comprehensive service the company received from the BatchMaster Consulting Team. "For Andy's Seasoning, the training and learning benefits were accelerated with BatchMaster's on-site services. Consultants were able to walk us through our processes, demonstrating how BatchMaster automates each process," attested Cannon. "BatchMaster consultants and support have been such a pleasure with which to work. We have found them to be extremely knowledgeable and readily available."

The team at Andy's Seasonings agrees that BatchMaster Manufacturing is what the company has needed and that BatchMaster's functionality will carry them into the future as they continue to utilize even more of the product features. Today, the company now offers quality dry blends of breading, batters, and seasoning salt. Oh, and they've expanded facilities twice to a nearly 30,000 sq. ft. building with additional warehouse space, office space and R&D lab. The team shares that as demand for products increases, Andy's Seasoning will continue to rely on BatchMaster Manufacturing for Dynamics GP to manage growth and to help them operate efficiently. The teams' positive experience with BatchMaster Consulting Services will allow them to move forward confidently as well.
